San Francisco Call.

Nahida Remy's book is a masterly work of psychological truth and historical exactness. Mrs. Mannheimer has rendered inestimable service by her excellent translation of this celebrated work.

Chicago—The Dial.

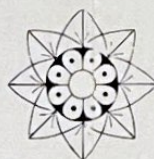

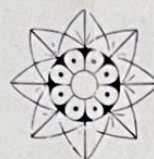

Mrs. Louise Mannheimer's scholarly translation of Nahida Remy's searching and eloquent study of "The Jewish Woman," merits wide attention. There is not a dull line in the entire work, and, once taken up, the reader will be fascinated to the end by the story as it is unrolled.

St. Louis Voice.

One might, after perusing the book in its English garb, consider it an independent, almost original work. Typographically and otherwise, such as paper, binding, etc., make Mrs. Mannheimer's book a desirable addition to any library.

Baltimore Comment.

When the original work was issued it created quite a sensation in literary circles, both in Germany and America. Mrs. Mannheimer deserves great credit for her most excellent translation; indeed the additions made by Mrs. Mannheimer entitle her to the claim of collaborator.

Cleveland Review.

As an auxiliary contribution to modern literature for the English reader, this elegant work will at once commend itself. The authoress has a German renown as a Semitic scholar; although a Christian by birth, she has devoted her life to Jewish history, its religion and polity. Remy's delineation of Jewish woman is in a glowing language, inspiring the reader with ardent fervor for the race that produced such noble women. Historically, however, the authoress treats her subject with data quite novel and interesting. It is this latter feature which lends to her work a special literary value.

New York—The World.

The book is a study of the influence of woman and of her relations to home and the State. As a contribution to the woman question it is of special value. Mrs. Louise Mannheimer, of Cincinnati, has done a service that will win her the lasting gratitude of American readers, through her English translation of Nahida Remy's celebrated work.

New York—The Menorah.

The book must prove a welcome boon and a powerful help in advancing the work which the best among Jewish women are engaged in.
