

"I have done my duty"
Florence Nightingale
in the Crimean War
1854–56

Edited by Sue M. Goldie

"I have done my duty"

Florence Nightingale
in the Crimean War
1854–56

edited by Sue M. Goldie

Manchester University Press

Editorial matter copyright © Sue Moriarty 1987; copyright in the letters themselves rests with the sources attributed

Published by
Manchester University Press
Oxford Road, Manchester M13 9PL

British Library cataloguing in publication data

Nightingale, Florence

'I have done my duty': Florence Nightingale and the Crimean War, 1854-56.

1. Crimean War, 1853-1856—Medical Care.

2. Crimean War, 1853-1856—Personal narratives, British

1. Title 11. Goldie, Sue.

947'073 UH258 1853/6

ISBN 0 7190 1960 5 hardback

Typeset in Great Britain
by Alan Sutton Publishing Ltd., Gloucester Printed and bound in Great Britain
by Billings & Sons Limited, Worcester.

Contents

	Page
Illustrations	vi
Abbreviations	viii
Acknowledgements	xi
Introduction	1
Chapter 1 A great and national work	15
2 Scutari: "this gigantic desolation"	32
3 To use and be used	69
4 Balaclava: illness and convalescence	126
5 The "papal aggression"	151
6 The "confidential report"	191
7 In General Orders	229
8 Winding up	265
Epilogue: "I shall never forget"	285
Appendix Confidential Report on the Nursing System, since its Introduction to the Crimea on the 23rd January 1855; and the Supplementary Report on the Nurse System, by David Fitzgerald, Purveyor to the Forces.	298
Bibliography	305
Index	307	