PREFATORY NOTE

THE SPEECHES contained in these volumes have been selected from those which Lord DERBY delivered out of Parliament from his entrance into public life to his death. They are published by his Widow, in the belief that Lord DERBY'S observations and conclusions, the result of careful study, may still be of use to the country which in his lifetime it was his principal ambition to serve. In accordance with her wishes the editors have endeavoured to restrict the selection to such speeches as are of general and present interest, and to eliminate from these, so far as might be compatible with their aim and structure, any portions which dealt with points of purely temporary or local importance. The greater number of the Speeches here published will therefore be found to relate to what are popularly termed social subjects, upon which Lord DERBY'S words are unquestionably valuable and suggestive.
