THOMAS.—On the 30th Dec., at Castle Hall, Milford Haven, Sir Hugh J. P. THOMAS, Kt., High Sheriff of Pembroke, aged 45 years. Funeral to-morrow (Friday), Castle Hall, 12 o'clock.

THE TIMES, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1924.

OBITUARY.

SIR HUGH THOMAS.

Sir Hugh James Protheroe Thomas, of Castle Hall, Milford Haven, died yesterday morning after an operation for appendicitis at the age of 45. He was the sole surviving partner of James Thomas and Son, land and estate agents, of Haverfordwest, an old firm who acted for the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, the Welsh Church Commissioners, and many county families. In April, 1920, Sir Hugh bought the whole town of Milford Haven with some adjacent lands from the National Provident Institution. The value was locally estimated at £250,000. The Hon. C. F. Greville, who inherited the property from his uncle, Sir William Hamilton, was, by an Act of Parliament in 1790, authorized to form and develop the township and port. Castle Hall, a house built 120 years ago by Sir William Hamilton, was sold with the rest of the property. It was the home of Lady Hamilton and Milford numbered Lord Nelson among its patrons and visitors. Sir Hugh, who was knighted in 1922, had been educated at Haverfordwest Grammar School, and was twice mayor of the town, and for many years a trustee of local charities. He was also High Sheriff of Pembroke this year, an alderman of the county council, a magistrate and deputy lieutenant, a governor of the county hospital, and a member of the county Territorial Association. In 1904 he married Charlotte Evelyn, daughter of Bayly Matthews, of Haverfordwest, and leaves a son.

after an operation for appendicitis, had perhaps little fame outside his sleepy home county of Pembroke, but he was a very typical example of a class of men of whom London rarely hears, but who nevertheless represent one of the most distinctive features of our age.

Indeed, though the expression sounds a little paradoxical, there is hardly any type more distinctive of England than the successful Welshman through all the ages of history. The list begins with Sir Rhys ap Thomas, who founded the fortunes of his native country by setting the Welsh house of Tudor on the English Throne.

We are apt to think of the Welshman as a dreamy individual devoted to song and poetry, and to overlook his commercial importance. In fact, he is distinguished by restless energy, and in every part of the world he will be found in positions of financial importance. Cardiff probably has more millionaires to the square mile than any town in England, the "sub-metropolises" of Lancashire and Yorkshire included.

Castle Hall.

The late Sir Hugh Thomas's home at Castle Hall, near Milford, is one of the most famous of the smaller country houses of Great Britain. At the beginning of the nineteenth century it belonged to Sir William Hamilton, and there, in 1800, came Nelson, in company with his Emma and her husband, fresh from the glories of the Nile and the campaign in which he enabled the Neapolitan Court to escape from Naples to Palermo.

It was, I believe, largely Nelson's influence that brought about the foundation of the Royal dockyard at Milford, which was in later years transferred to Pembroke.

Castle Hall was sold up in the early days of the last century, and as a result of the sale it became a ruin.

Training Candidates

The Unionists already have twenty-one prospective candidates, including two women from the Philip Stott College at Northampton. This college is owed to the munificence of Sir Philip Stott, the famous factory architect, and its object is to give a course in economics and history to candidates and workers of Unionist inclination. It is a residential college, and is part of the organisation of the Labour side of the Unionist movement. It has been running two years.

Women Speakers

Although so far the Labour Party has the longest list of women candidates, the election will find Conservative women well prepared as speech makers. The British Women's Patriotic League had courses of public speaking

Impressions of the Spahlinger Treatment from Personal Visits to the Geneva Institute.

BY GERALDINE BREMNER.

At a time when the Spahlinger treatment for tuberculosis is so much under discussion, it may be of interest to readers of THE NURSING MIRROR to know the impressions I have gained during five weeks' stay in Geneva during which time I have been a constant visitor to the Spahlinger Institute. It is at Carouge, a short distance from Geneva, and is approached by an avenue of beautiful trees. The old country house and farm buildings stand high and are surrounded by fairly extensive grounds. This was the old home of the Spahlinger family, and is now given up entirely to research work. The house serves as the laboratory and the out-buildings as quarters for the animals—horses, cows, calves, sheep, donkeys, monkeys and guinea pigs—all of each play important parts in Monsieur Spahlinger's work.

GLASS-BLOWING ON THE PREMISES.

The interests of the laboratory itself are never ending. It is very well equipped. Much of the most important apparatus used has been invented by M. Spahlinger himself, and has been the admiration of numerous scientifically trained workers who have visited the Institution. Amongst other things, glass-blowing for ampules, tubes, etc., is done on the premises. What strikes the stranger most about the staff, is their enthusiasm for their chief and their equal keenness in all that pertains to "the cause." The second in command is M. Spahlinger's mother. She is a remarkable woman, and although she is now white-haired and not so young as she used to be—in years, that is—there is no work or department at the Institute in which she cannot, and does not, lend a skilled hand, from the bleeding of animals—necessary in the preparation of sera—to the most technical tasks of the laboratory. Her skill and devotion are an inspiration and example to all who come in contact with her. She is interested in the patients and in their minor as well as their major ailments. One may often see her, as she passes on her busy daily round and common task, pause a moment to give a word of motherly advice to some patient or friend in need of it.

GREAT FAITH OF THE PATIENTS.

The patients who come to the laboratory for treatment—some every day, others once, twice or three times a week, according to the particular treatment prescribed for them—have the greatest faith in and affection for Monsieur Spahlinger, and this can well be understood after careful observation and conversation with them. Some of these who are approaching the completion of their cure and about to return home, tell of the deplorable state they were in on arriving at Geneva—high temperature, cough, much expectoration, positive sputum test. Now to all appearances these patients have nothing wrong with them, and give excellent reports from their doctors. Each patient on arrival is examined by one or other Swiss specialist, and subsequent periodical examinations are insisted upon. Those patients who are too ill to visit the laboratory are treated in their temporary homes.

It would take too much space to go into details as to the administration of the treatment, but a few words on the subject may not be out of place here. Serum is given by hypodermic injection and is also taken by mouth. The object in the use of serum is the attainment of passive immunity. Vaccines (active immunity) are administered hypodermically. Just now, and for some time past, M. Spahlinger has been working with partial remedies, his complete series, both of sera and vaccines, he has not yet been able to reproduce since the war, which interfered very greatly with his work. He has, however, lately succeeded in simplifying the vaccines he employs in the bovine section of his treatment so that the series is now conveniently small in number and easier and cheaper to produce than formerly. Tests made recently have demonstrated the remarkable immunization powers of these vaccines on a group of bullocks. It is hard to resist the hope that M. Spahlinger may at no distant date endeavour similarly to simplify his human vaccines.

A final word as to M. Spahlinger himself. In conversation with him one feels instinctively that he rings true, and that there can be no shadow of a doubt as to his sincerity and genuineness. My visit to Geneva has roused in me a great ray of hope for those suffering from this terrible scourge.

11th February, 1925.

Dear Sir Arthur Stanley,

On thinking over the deliberations of the Meeting we had at 7, Walbrook, on the 6th instant, in reference to the Superannuation Scheme for Hospital Officers and Nurses, I cannot help feeling that the tone of the Meeting was decidedly nice - but there was just the one weak point; namely, the desire on the part of some of the ~~workers~~ Members present to exclude from the scheme the probationers in training. That of course would be fatal; it would do away with the special scheme we have always wished for, and intended to have - namely, a scheme for the whole Nursing profession. Nothing else will satisfy us as a profession!

While quite realising the financial difficulties, I believe there is nothing in the world that cannot be done when capable business men meet together and take the matter in hand.

Is it not possible that some Hospital Authorities do not realise how much they owe to the Probationer Nurses, who spend three or four of the best years of their lives in the Hospital service. - Getting a training, it is

HALIFAX MAN'S LIFT TO FUND.

From Our Own Reporter, Thursday.

The U. Methodist conference was con- tinued at Oxford Road Church, Manchester, to-day, the president (L. Rev. William A. Grist) being in the chair.

The morning session was devoted to the consideration of Foreign Missions. The Charles Stedford gave an account of his recent visit to South African Mission Stations, which he found in a very hopeful condition. The conference welcomed the missionaries who had returned from foreign stations, all of whom appeared on the platform—the Revs. Dr. G. K. Robson, from North China, A. H. Shoeman, from Wenchow, A. H. Hopkins, from East Africa, and Nurse W. B. Ranie, from Yunnan.

Mr. Joseph Ward (treasurer) stated that the ordinary income had been £31,433, an increase of over £130. Their object, however, should be to raise the income to £40,000 per year. The special £30,000 Fund had amounted to £400 over the amount set out to raise.

The grants to the various stations for the coming year were £30,608. The following new appointments were made: The Rev. J. Jackson to the East Africa District, the Rev. K. W. May to the Yunnan District, Miss O. Dymond to the Yunnan District, Miss D.

there was little on the subject of firearms with which he was not acquainted. In early life he was asked to manage a jeweller's shop in Regent-street, London. Though he sat in the House of Commons, Sir Edward's political career was to all intents and purposes a failure. He was not cut out for politics, he made very few speeches in the House of Commons and his knowledge of politics does not seem to have been very great.

Southport— and a Dream.

He was elected for Southport, and the story of how he came to Southport is an interesting one. At the invitation of Mr. Sam Brighthouse he visited the town, but so little did he then know about politics that the local party chieftains, assembled at the platform to meet him, were horrified to find their prospective candidate wearing a tie of blazing red, which was of course, the Liberal colour. He gave them no definite answer to their invitation, and thinking the matter over decided that he would not enter politics.

He was going to shoot in the Midlands and intended to telegraph a definite refusal to Southport when he reached Liverpool-street Station. The train was almost on the move and he just managed to get himself and his guns into it in time.

Then, he said, "A strange thing happened. I fell asleep in my corner and woke up to find what seemed an endless line of trucks moving on a parallel line in the same direction as we were going. Fast as we were going, it took a long time to overtake them. Eventually we ran abreast of the engine and there in big gold letters was the name 'Southport.' It seemed to me a direct omen and when I got to Leicester I sent a wire to say I would stand for the constituency." At Southport he charmed everybody by which he appeared were masterpieces of oratory, moving judge, jury and all those who were present in court.

It was his custom to select one jurymen whom he regarded as the most intelligent or most amenable member of the jury, and talk to him in order to make a particular friend among them if there was no one there already. If there was one of them in his favour his keen eye was quick to see it, and he would hammer away at the others till his persistence and magnetism had won them also.

Some good stories emerge from his experiences. There was the case of an old gamekeeper once employed by Sir Edward's brother-in-law, who had loaded
